Additionally, she has successfully written grants for the Tribe and helped forge connections between the local school district and the Tribe to improve educational outcomes for Tribal youth. Her advocacy work includes leading initiatives for suicide prevention, securing funding for educational programs, and championing ICWA rights to protect the welfare of Native American children. Her commitment to her family and community continues to inspire those around her. As it is written in 1 Peter 4:10, "Each of you should use whatever gift you have received to serve others, as faithful stewards of God's grace in its various forms". This is how Aimee continues to live her life.

In her personal life, Jackson has been married for 16 years to an amazing man who has provided unwavering support and care. She is a proud Native American woman, a mother of ten, with many wonderful grandchildren, nieces, and nephews. Her greatest achievements are her family, and she cherishes spending time with them, as well as writing in her minimal spare time and enjoying nature in the forest or by the water.

Born in Upper Lake, California, Aimee is the second of six strong sisters. Raised on the Upper Lake Reservation by loving parents, she attended the Upper Lake School District from early education through high school. Currently, she is pursuing a BA in Business Management and Native American Studies through online college.
